Problem Statement

A good, free planner doesn't exist as one single app, they're always either blocked behind a paywall or they just don't do everything you'd want them to.

As someone with ADHD I prefer having a planner on my phone I will not lose, yet no planner has the ability to show my schedule for the day as well as to do tasks as well as little notes I leave to myself all on the same page. For that I found you need multiple apps to use, all having a paywall blocking key features. This experience is not just my own, many with the same struggles as mine encounter the same issues, and not everyone has money to throw for a subscription service to 3 or more scheduling apps.

Being able to see a to-do list of the day as well as a schedule paired with how much time the user has between events is important, especially when factoring in travel time and other activities of the day. I struggle to remember certain things and have somewhat poor time management so to be able to have all of that- including being able to leave notes to myself that aren't simply written on my hand is important both to me, and the many others who face similar struggles.
